Centennial of the Missouri School of Journalism ■ Dedication of the Reynolds Journalism Institute

Share Your Stories

They say journalism is the first draft of history—and we know Missouri Journalism alumni have been helping write it for 100 years. We want to know how you have been involved in the history of the last century, whether it was writing breaking news, creating successful ad campaigns or making your mark in any number of careers.

Tell us how your work contributed to or coincided with a particular historical or cultural event using any one of the six submission options listed below. Two new options—a YouTube channel and a wiki—give you more flexibility in sharing your memories, tales and reflections. And, you can always write us.

Feel like addressing a different prompt? You can use the ones below to craft your story. We will highlight some of them in the centennial/dedication materials.

- ✓ Identify work you did as a J-student that involved significant events and activities.
- ✓ Share something you learned at the J-School that has sustained you throughout your career/life.
- ✓ Describe a time when J-School alumni have made a difference in your career and/or life.
- ✓ Forecast the future: What do you think will influence journalism in the next century and in what way?

Share Your Books

Many Missouri alumni have added the title "author" to a long list of career successes, and we want to know what you've been writing.

The University Bookstore is celebrating the Centennial/Dedication with a Missouri Journalism authors display during the Sept. 10-12 celebration. Alumni are invited to submit the titles of their books for inclusion in this impressive display. You do not have to attend the event to have your book displayed. Please submit the following information to the book display coordinator, Chris Willow-Schomaker, by e-mail at willow-schomaker@missouri.edu or by mail at University Bookstore, TA Brady Commons, Columbia, MO 65211. Deadline for submission is Aug. 15, 2008.
