

Faculty profile

Frederick Anklam

Expertise areas

- Social media
- Search engines
- Communication technology
- Political communication
- Health communication

Possible collaboration disciplines

- College of Arts and Science
- NextGen Precision Health
- Sinclair School of Nursing
- School of Information, Science & Learning Technologies
- Trulaske College of Business

Fred Anklam Jr. is a journalist with more than 45 years of experience in local and national newsrooms both as a reporter and editor. He is skilled in leading reporting teams particularly those covering local and state government.

Anklam was co-editor of the digital nonprofit newsroom, MississippiToday.org during its launch and early years, gaining knowledge of the funding requirements for what has become an emerging space for watchdog journalism. Both at USA TODAY and Mississippi Today, he embraced the concepts of collaboration between media partners as a way of broadening the public's knowledge of government and politics.

Anklam uses his experience to teach the next generation of journalists how to be best practitioners of our profession while embracing innovative approaches to storytelling both in print and in the digital environment.

Learn more about Fred on the J-School website

Missouri School of Journalism
University of Missouri

journalism.missouri.edu